Located on the eastern border of Napa County, Solano County is becoming a hub for the North Coast wine industry, especially suppliers. Solano County is adjacent to Napa and strategically located between the San Francisco Bay Area and the State Capitol of Sacramento. Solano County's strong California quality of life, world-class universities, technical colleges, and growing pool of high-skilled workers make it one of the most attractive locations within Northern California for emerging technology companies.

Talent, ideas, collaboration and connectivity have become the main competitive advantages in the new global economy. Economic regions are not simply defined by political boundaries, but by connectivity in industry clusters, labor markets, and supporting infrastructure.

Leaders in the vast wine industry ecosystem are seeing strong growth potential in Solano County due to a large and skilled workforce, affordable land costs, high quality and abundant water supply, state-of-the-art sewer treatment facilities, a strategic location on major transportation routes and pro-business local government.

Solano County is currently home to 23 wineries, according to Wines Vines Analytics, and a growing market for industrial suppliers in packaging including bottling, corking, closures, labeling, and distribution.
